Four Roles for Diminutive Star in Next Production

Mark Twain's "The Prince and the Pauper" With Marquerite Clark in Both Characters, First of Humorist's Work to Be Filmed, on the Paramount Program

For the first time in the history of the screen the motion picture is to reflect the humor and pathos of Mark Twain's immortal tale, The Prince and the Pauper," when on November 29th the Famous Players Film Company's photoplay production is released and shown at Paramount theaters throughout the coun-

It will be remembered that the Lasky Feature Play Company, another producer of Paramount Pictures, recently obtained the rights to Huckleberry Finn and the rest of Mark Twain's works, but before that the Famous Players Company had succeeded in persuading those who controlled the author's copyrights to allow The Prince and the Pauper, to be filmed. Knowing the high standard of Famous Players produc tions, they felt sure that nothing would be lost in the transcription from book and play to screen,

Though The Prince and the Pauper, has been extremely successful as a stage vehicle, the limitations of the theater made it necessary to so construct the story that the two main characters did not appear on the stage at the same time, since their marked resemblance made it necessary that they shou'd be played by the same person.

In the Famous Players Paramount Picture this difficulty is entirely eliminated, Marguerite Clark appearing as the royal child and the beggar simultaneous'y.

Realizing that double exposure for its own sake is no longer new, the directors, Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, have introduced it only when absolutely necessary and here with country in The Crucible; The Goose rare effect. prince. The latter, all who know the story will remember, envies the pauper his freedom and the beggar lad looks with longing eyes upon the purple and fine linen of the King's son. They change places, and after many exciting, humorous, and pathetic adventures they return to their former stations in life, each convinced that what is, is best.

The production is conceived and executed in the same spirit that so distinguished Mark Twain's tale, In support of Miss Clark there appears a splendid cast including Robert Broderick, William Sorelle, William Barrows, William Frederick and other well known players.

"Four feet two inches of pure delight" is the way Marguerite Clark's stage director characterizes the little actress, and he is enthusiastically seconded by those who have been responsible for her recent appearances in motion pictures.

"I was born in Avondale, near Cininnati," Miss Clark said when attacked by a note book and pencil and a rapid fire of questions as to her past history, "And I will never forget my first appearance on the stage. It was with the Aborn Opera Company in Baltimore. J. K. Murray and Clara Lane were the principals and it was way back in 1900. Then followed engagements with The Belle of Bonemia, The Burgomaster, and The New Yorkers.

"DeWolf Hopper in his search for a little leading lady, picked me for Mr. Pickwick and I played with him in Wang, Happyland, and The Pied Piper. My first co-star part was with Jefferson DeAngelis in The Beauty Spot, and my first starring vehicle was The King of Cadonia, which did not seem to find favor in New York. I was then in the all star cast of Jim the Penman, and later created the role of Zoie in Baby Mine, in which Ernest Glendinning played opposite me. Then came that delightful little play, Prunella, in Which Mr. Glendinning and were together again.

"It was at this time that the Famous Payers Film Company asked me to appear in Paramount Pictures produced by them and Wildflower. was my first screen venture."

Miss Clark has since appeared at Paramount theaters throughout the
